

Assisted Evaporation

Assisted Evaporation is an effective water management solution supplied by National Pump & Energy (NPE). Assisted evaporation systems provide a unique, effective solution for customers where restrictions on discharging water off site, leads to excess water storage issues.

The team at National Pump & Energy (NPE) has significant experience offering water management services to a range of mining, civil and general construction projects throughout Australia.

NPE are the largest assisted evaporation system supplier in Australia, with around 200 evaporation system units. NPE also has the rights to three of the world's leading assisted evaporation products, both land based and floating.

Assisted evaporator units are typically supplied in banks of multiple units, to achieve the desired removal rates. These are fully automated, run by weather stations which activate the systems based on pre-programmed weather criteria, so there is no need for site personnel to operate them.

Our turnkey service commences with concept, design and complete engineering, progressing through to fabrication, mechanical and electrical services to build systems in-house, followed by pre-installation testing before our assembly, installation and commissioning teams complete the process on site.

NPE has a huge range of assisted evaporation equipment available, with all equipment in stock, ready to deploy to your site.

Why use NPE assisted evaporation

- Enables compliance with EPA legislation
- More efficient and effective than solar evaporation
- Reduces the need for additional storage ponds
- Single and multi-system solutions
- Fully automated solution with remote access
- No overspray or contamination issues
